Iowa National Guard

Troops of the Iowa national guard, who are now arriving daily in Deming, are among the most famous of the state soldiers in the country. The northern state has contributed over 10,000 volunteers to the national forces in the present crisis, and one regiment, the Third infantry is leaving this week for the eastern coast from where it will soon embark for France with the second expeditionary contingent.

The Iowa soldiers stationed at Brownsville, Texas, last year under the command of Brigadier General H. A. Allen made an enviable record and were by the verdict of officers of the regular army, the best of the 40,000 soldiers in the district. The Iowa artillery succeeded in establishing themselves as the best artillery troops in the national guard by actual test. One squadron of Iowa cavalry also ranked high in discipline and efficiency.

The supreme showing of the soldiers from the Hawkeye state was made in the district maneuvers held in September, when General Allen outwitted and his soldiers outmarched the opposing forces to such an extent that the war game was called off after five days. It was scheduled for ten days of practice fighting but the enemy force was theoretically annihilated twice during the five days of fighting.

Through his work in this maneuver, General Allen recently received his appointment as a brigadier in the army of the United States by order of President Wilson. He was fitted for this position by twenty-five years of national guard experience.

The last Iowa troops returned from the Brownsville district in February and immediately after the declaration of war against Germany, active recruiting commenced. The Iowa battalion of field artillery was made into a regiment within six weeks and every infantry regiment was filled by the end of May. An ammunition train of over 700 men, to be motorized, has also been secured and thousands from the state have joined the colors by enlisting in the regular army and navy. The draft quota is very small in that state. As an example, Davenport, a city of 60,000, has contributed but 157 men to the national army, and in many smaller towns, practically every able bodied young man is doing his bit.

The Iowa troops were called into federal service July 15 in the first draft guard. The first battalion of the artillery was ordered to Fort Logan H. Rots, Ark., to assist in the training of the officers for the national army. The motor ammunition train expects embarkation orders daily. The remainder of the troops, about 7,000 in number, are to be stationed at Deming, where one unit of each regiment is now encamped. The organizations now here are Battery D, First Iowa Artillery, Company A, Second Infantry, Company B, Iowa Engineers, and Troop A, Iowa cavalry.

Boys' Club Camp on Mimbres

A dozen happy youngsters left the Boys' Club Headquarters last Wednesday headed for their camp on the Mimbres river near Faywood. The secretary, T. E. Murray, had previously gone out and set up the camp and when the boys arrived they found a steaming hot supper awaiting them, prepared by the camp chef, Deacon Dean.

If you have never been to a boys' camp, you have missed one of the greatest pleasures you might have had.

All during the day you might have gone over the hills studying trees, leaves and brush; practiced on different methods of signaling; you might have gone fishing, or indulged in the ancient and honorable pastime of "pitching horseshoes."

After a day of these activities, with twice in the nice warm (1) swimming hole, and three "mess calls," darkness creeps over the valley, and the fellows start for their parade grounds, a big campfire is started and talks about the end of a perfect day commence.

Everyone helps with the camp songs, a good thrilling story or two, a few jokes, then a good pointed talk, and everyone feels ready for the soft bed of "caliche" — oh! what's the use of going on?

After you have snuggled down under your blanket, and looked up into the sky above, you can earnestly feel "Strange are the murmurings in the trees."

Secret the whisperings in the breeze HOME in the heart of the wilderness.
